Domains size

Cities/Castles

In Sandbox Generator (SG), when generating cities & castles, factions were created with a domain totaling seven hexes. This supplement tries to add some variety by giving the nobles various titles and a domain whose size reflects that.

Cities that are not ruled by nobles will remain the same, and their domain will all be of the same size.

When a city (ruled by a noble) or a castle (see SG pp. 38-43 & 44-48) is generated, use the following table to determine the title of nobility of their owner and to know what their domain is called:

	Ruler	Domain	#
1-5	Knight Dame	Fief	1
6-9	Baron Baroness	Barony	2
10-12	Viscount Viscountess	Viscounty	4
13-15	Count Countess	County	8
16-17	Marquess Marchioness	March	16
18-19	Duke Duchess	Duchy	32
20	Prince Princess	Principality	64

The third column shows the number of layers around the castle/town that make up the domain. Thus, we can see that all domains generated with SG alone are actually owned by knights (and dames) since there is only one layer of hexes around the one containing the city/castle.

Abbeys

The size of abbatial domains is unchanged (= 1 hex), but this supplement adds the notion of religious influence.

Within a domain, the clergy has more or less influence on politics, depending on the number of abbeys.

- If there are fewer abbeys than cities and castles combined, the ruler is less likely to be influenced by the clergy. Maybe they are atheist or do not care about them.
- If the number of abbeys is (more or less) equal to the number of cities and castles combined, the clergy and the ruler have equal weight in political decisions. They may be working together, or there may be a power struggle.
- If a domain has more abbeys than cities and castles combined, then the ruler's decisions are heavily influenced by the clergy. Either they are very religious or the clergy is more influential than they are.

In the third case, we will talk of a religious faction. See p. 8 to know how this will influence the name of the faction.

Relationships

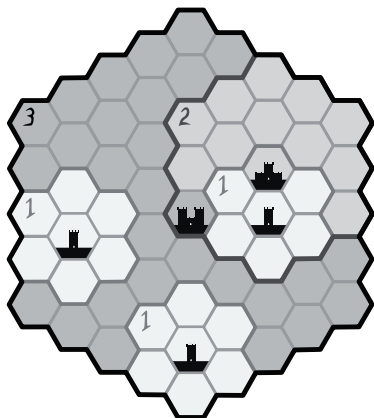

The relationship between two noble factions depends on several factors, the first of which is the relative location of their domains:

- If one domain is fully included in another, it is vassalage,
- If they have common hexes, there are contested areas,
- If two domains have no hex in common, they are neighbors.

Refer to the appropriate section.

Vassalage

When one (or multiple) smaller domain(s) is/are entirely included in a bigger one, that means that the former is the vassal of the latter.

(1) Fief, (2) Barony, (3) Viscountcy

In this example, we can see that a viscount has three vassals: two knights and a baron. The latter also has a knight as a vassal. The city/castle hex always belongs to the domain of the higher titled noble.

Vassals are sworn by an oath to provide military and financial support to their lord in exchange for a domain and protection. Despite this, its observance is not always absolute. A lord may not always treat their vassal as well as they should, just as a vassal may be disloyal to their lord (especially in retaliation).

Roll 2d6 once on the table below to determine how well the oath is respected by both parties:

2	Vassal is sabotaging
3-5	Vassal is unwilling
6-8	Mutual respect
9-11	Lord is neglectful/biased
12	Lord is oppressive

Events

Roll 1d6 to see if there is an event. If the result is 1, roll 1d6 on this table to determine whether the event:

1	Ended earlier
2-4	Is happening now
5-6	Will take place in the future

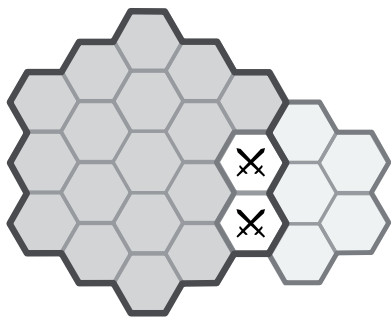

Then roll 1d12 to determine the nature of the vassalage event:

1	Abuse of power
2	Compulsory conscription
3	Dispute between vassals
4	Financial support not given
5	Gift from the lord
6	Inheritance
7	Lord's rise in title (see p. 4)
8	Military assistance not given
9	Oath sworn to the vassal
10	Political marriage
11	Rebellion against the lord
12	Trial at the lord's city/castle

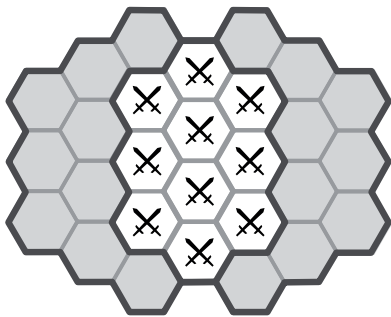

Contested areas

Cities/Castles

If two noble domains have any hexes in common, those hexes are a source of conflict and possibly a no man's land. Relations between the two factions are always tense, unless they eventually become one for some reason (alliance or annexation). In most cases, the faction with the larger domain is the aggressor.

The more hexes in common, the more tense the situation, and the greater the chance of war, if it has not already broken out. The worst cases are when one or both cities/castles are in the disputed zone.

Roll 1d10 on the table below to determine the reason why these hexes are contested by both factions:

1	Cultural significance
2	Historical belonging
3	Inheritance gone wrong
4	Natural landmark
5	Religious landmark
6	Resources (general)
7	Resources (special/unique)
8	Schism (cultural/religious)
9	Separatism
10	Vague boundaries

Lairs & Towers

If a lair is within a lord's domain, it is always considered a contested area. On the other hand, the presence of a tower may sometimes be tolerated.

In either case, adventurers and soldiers can be sent there if the domain is threatened.

Roll 2d6 on this table to determine how a wizard's presence is perceived on a lord's domain:

2	Hated
3-5	Feared
6-8	Tolerated/Ignored
9-11	Proves useful
12	Appreciated

Note: The domains belonging to vassals of the same lord can also have hexes in common, thus creating contested areas between the vassals. Just as vassals can be mere neighbors (see next page).

Neighbors

First, roll 2d6 on the following table to determine the relation between two neighboring factions:

2	Open war
3-5	Hostility
6-8	Indifference
9-11	Friendship
12	Alliance

Then roll 1d10 on the appropriate sub-table to determine which concept best describes that relationship:

Open war

1	Cultural conflict
2	Preemptive strike
3	Religion war
4	Resource scarcity
5	Revenge
6	Rulers are old enemies
7	Territorial dispute
8	Treason
9	Witch-hunt
10	Xenophobia

Hostility

1	Armistice
2	Arrogance
3	Chauvinism
4	Divergence in beliefs
5	Fear
6	Former allies
7	Jealousy
8	Pride
9	Rancor
10	Rivalry

Indifference

1	Coldness
2	Cordial agreement
3	Disregard
4	Isolationism
5	Lack of interest
6	Lassitude
7	Neutrality
8	Non-belligerency pact
9	Self-focus
10	Suspicion

1	Co-dependency
2	Common enemy
3	Common interests
4	Facade
5	Freedom of movement
6	Growing trust
7	Peace treaty
8	Rulers know each other well
9	Shared beliefs
10	Trade

Alliance

1	Dissuasive
2	Fragile
3	Long-lasting
4	Political marriage
5	Powerful
6	Prestigious
7	Shared knowledge/technology
8	Strong economic benefits
9	Temporary
10	Unity

Names

This section introduces three ways of naming the various factions that are created when noble-controlled cities and castles are generated.

Proper names

Roll 1d20 on the next table to generate a proper name for a faction:

1	Asturia
2	Baccavar
3	Chehebomond
4	Daekiver
5	Draetun
6	Egumnon
7	Eradu
8	Fassithia
9	Hepett
10	Jildis
11	Krogem
12	Lihisos
13	Nuvgar
14	Ommadell
15	Phunnilan
16	Rabolar
17	Ruclalyn
18	Saedrenia
19	Westocrys
20	Ystopomos

Domain-based names

A faction can also simply be referred to by the name of the city (see SG pp. 28-31) or castle (see SG p. 44) that is located in the center of its domain.

Example: (Castle) Dark Moor

To go one step further, the domain type can be added in front of the name of the city or castle.

Example: (Castle) Barony of Dark Moor

To add variety, adjectives can be placed before the domain type. Roll 1d12 on this table to choose one:

1	August
2	Autonomous
3	Exalted
4	Free
5	Glorious
6	Grand
7	Great
8	Mighty
9	Noble
10	Shining
11	Sublime
12	Supreme

In the case of a religious faction (see p. 4), roll 1d6 on this table to determine which adjective may be added before the domain type instead:

1	Blessed
2	Divine
3	Hallowed/Holy
4	Papal
5	Sacred
6	Saint

Examples:

- (Castle) Mighty Barony of Dark Moor
- (City) Glorious Fief of Mount-Birch
- *(City & Religious faction)
Saint Duchy of Peulinton*

Noble names

Another method is to use the last name of the noble leading the faction instead of the name of the city or castle. See p. 13 for a name generator.

Example: Divine County of Somervale

Domains events

Each domain turn (e.g. monthly), roll 1d6 to see if there is an event. If the result is 1, roll 1d6 on this table to determine whether the event... :

- 1 Ended earlier
- 2-4 Is happening now
- 5-6 Will take place in the future

Then, roll 1d10 to determine the nature of a domain event:

- 1-2 Crime
- 3-4 Economy
- 5-6 Natural/Magical
- 7-8 Political
- 9-10 Social

Crime

- 1 Assassination
- 2 Kidnapping
- 3 New criminal org. (SG p. 117)
- 4 Peasant revolt
- 5 Pillaged caravans
- 6 Raids (bandits, pirates)
- 7 Snake oil vendors
- 8 Tithe unpaid by villagers
- 9 Vigilante
- 10 Wanted criminal spotted

Economy

- 1 Disappearing caravans/ships
- 2 Domain is ruined
- 3 Embargo
- 4 Famine
- 5 Invaluable resources discovery
- 6 New guild (see SG p. 125)
- 7 Price cuts
- 8 Price hikes
- 9 Profitable trade agreement
- 10 Tax increase

Natural/Magical

- 1 Bloodthirsty beast
- 2 Curse
- 3 Enthralled people/ruler
- 4 Flooding
- 5 Landslide
- 6 Magical incident
- 7 Meteor impact
- 8 Plague
- 9 Rare magic phenomenon
- 10 Undead invasion

Political

- 1 Approaching army
- 2 Call to crusade/holy quest
- 3 Conscription
- 4 Death of foreign ambassador
- 5 Missing heir
- 6 Neighboring faction delegation
- 7 New ruler
- 8 Skirmish
- 9 Treaty signature
- 10 Unjust new ruler

Social

- 1 Birth
- 2 Birth (illegitimate child)
- 3 Death of a notable
- 4 Disappearance
- 5 Divorce
- 6 Funeral
- 7 Mass exodus/immigration
- 8 New cult
- 9 New fad
- 10 Wedding

Functioning

How to join

Depending on one's birth, joining a noble faction can be easier or harder. A character also has the possibility to clear the wilderness to create a faction and establish a new domain.

As a level 9 warrior

This may be the easiest way, as these warriors are often approached by the nobles and offered a fraction of their land to build their castle. In exchange, they become their vassal (and thus a knight or a dame, the lowest title of nobility, see p. 4).

As a commoner

Commoners can work as peasants on a noble's domain, or they can enlist in their army to serve as soldiers. In the latter case, if they prove themselves worthy (see table below), they can advance in rank. If they survive long enough, they might be ennobled and become knights (or dames) without necessarily being a level 9 warrior.

Roll 1d10 on the table below to determine what quest is deemed to be worthy enough to be promoted:

1	Bringing vital information
2	Capturing an enemy noble
3	Clearing a lair
4	Foiling a conspiracy
5	Freeing a captured noble
6	Killing many enemy soldiers
7	Killing/Capturing a dragon
8	Retrieving a relic
9	Saving their lord (or family)
10	Taking over an enemy position

As a noble

This part only applies to nobles who, for whatever reason, do not own land. Without land, they lose their title but not their lineage.

First, roll 1d10 to determine why a lord has no land:

1	Banned/Exiled
2	Betrayed (by) their faction
3	Comes from a foreign land
4	Is deemed too young
5	Is the last of their lineage
6	Land was given to another
7	Lost it in the war
8	Their faction was destroyed
9	Was not (yet) given land
10	Was prisoner for a long time

They have their own ways of joining a faction:

- They may simply choose to become a vassal to another noble with sufficient land.
- Or they can intrigue to obtain a better title and domain (possibly without becoming a vassal).

Roll 1d12 on the table below to determine the easiest way to do this:

1-3	Marriage
4-5	Sponsor
6	Buying a domain
7	Gambling/Betting
8	Inheritance from a relative
9	Overthrowing another noble
10	Winning a tournament

Initiation

Once someone is accepted into an existing faction, they may have to go through an initiation to become a full member. Roll 1d12 to determine what it is:

1-3	No initiation
4-5	Feast
6	Blood oath
7	Consecration/Baptism
8	Occult ritual
9	Pilgrimage
10	Spiritual retreat
11	Test of faith
12	Trials

Goals

While factions mostly care only about wealth and power, they may have another goal. Roll 1d20 to determine what it is:

1	Abolish slavery
2	Amass enormous wealth
3	Bring honor to their name
4	Control the country
5	Create a monster free realm
6	Destroy (an)other faction(s)
7	Destroy another faith
8	Enforce justice
9	Eradicate undead
10	Establish an immortal empire
11	Find a powerful relic
12	Fulfill a prophecy
13	Help the weak and the poor
14	Impose their faith
15	Prevent a prophecy
16	Prohibit (black) magic
17	Resurrect their founder
18	Serve a powerful patron
19	Territorial expansion
20	Trading monopoly

Means

Factions use different means and behaviors to achieve their goals. Depending on their adherence to the code of chivalry, they are categorized as honorable or dishonorable. This sometimes contradicts the goal the faction is trying to achieve.

First, roll 1d10 on this table to determine their type, then, roll 1d10 twice on the appropriate sub-table to choose two means or behaviors:

1-2	Any (roll once on each table)
3-6	Honorable
7-10	Dishonorable

Honorable

1	Comradeship
2	Confidentiality
3	Dignity
4	Education
5	Fair play
6	Generosity
7	Honesty
8	Penance
9	Piety
10	Respect

Dishonorable

1	Assassination
2	Black magic
3	Blackmail
4	Cheating
5	Corruption
6	Fanaticism
7	Flattery
8	Lying
9	Sucker punch
10	Treason

99-00	Wild

Other titles

Roll 1d12 on this table only if a last name was previously generated:

1-10 None

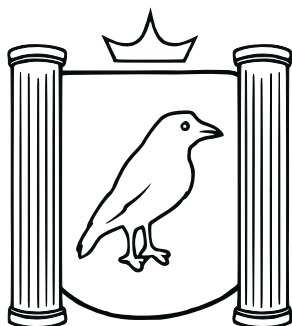

- | | |
|----|--|
| 11 | ... son/daughter of ...
(generate another name) |
| 12 | ... the second/the third |

Examples

- First name & last name:
Martha Somervale
- First name & nickname:
Sigismund the Brave
- First name, last name & other title:
Lysandre Ravenrush, daughter of Oswald the Wicked

Coat of arms

Use Sandbox Generator (tables pp. 112-116) to generate a coat of arms for the noble's faction.

Distinctive trait

Roll 1d20 on the table below to find out what makes them recognizable from the other nobles:

- | | |
|-----|----------------------------|
| 1-5 | Nothing (or reroll) |
| 6 | Beautiful/Ugly |
| 7 | Birthmark |
| 8 | Burned face |
| 9 | Deformity |
| 10 | Dresses humbly |
| 11 | Giant hat |
| 12 | Heterochromia |
| 13 | Intricate tattoos |
| 14 | Is missing an arm/an eye |
| 15 | Nasty scar (& blinded eye) |
| 16 | Ostentatious clothing |
| 17 | Red-hot branding |
| 18 | Very colorful clothing |
| 19 | Very long hair/beard |
| 20 | Reroll and combine |

Personal goal

A noble may have a goal unrelated to politics and their faction. Roll 1d12 on this table to determine what it is:

- | | |
|-----|----------------------------|
| 1-5 | Nothing notable |
| 6 | Atone |
| 7 | Avenge someone |
| 8 | Be better than their rival |
| 9 | Become a famous artist |
| 10 | Become a mentor |
| 11 | Become immortal/a god |
| 12 | Conquer their demons |
| 13 | End their suffering |
| 14 | Find enlightenment |
| 15 | Find the truth |
| 16 | Lift a curse |
| 17 | Raise and prepare an heir |
| 18 | Repay a life debt |
| 19 | Reunite with someone |
| 20 | Write their memoir |

Renown/Infamy

Roll 1d20 on the table below to determine why a noble is (in)famous (it may be just a rumor):

1-5	Their lineage
6	Climbed the social ladder
7	Collects ears of their enemies
8	Has a beautiful partner
9	Has a terrible addiction
10	Has dozens of children
11	Host lavish parties
12	Is a leper
13	Is cursed
14	Is feared on the battlefield
15	Their generosity is limitless
16	Their prisons are overflowing
17	Tortures prisoners for fun
18	Was made a saint in their lifetime
19	Was thought to be dead
20	Witnessed a miracle

Family secret

Roll 1d6 to check if their family has acquired wealth in a dubious way. If the result is 1, roll 1d12 to know how:

1	Colonization/Distant trading
2	Divine intervention
3	Pact with demons
4	Pillaging
5	Slavery
6	Stealing
7	Treason
8	Warmongering
9	Working for a dragon (see SG p. 121)
10	Working for a wizard (see SG p. 147)
11	Working with a criminal organization (see SG p. 117)
12	Working with monsters

Weapon

As described earlier, although there are exceptions, nobles are warriors (level 9 and above). All nobles are thus trained to use weapons, whether at a young age, while squiring for an older noble, or while serving as a soldier or adventurer.

First, roll 1d12 on the table below to determine their preferred weapon:

1	Axe
2	Bow
3	Crossbow
4	Flail
5	Lance
6	Longsword
7	Mace
8	Rapier
9	Saber
10	Spear
11	Two-handed sword
12	Warhammer

Then, roll 1d6 to check if the weapon is magic. If the result is 1, roll 1d6 to determine the effect:

1	+1
2	+1d4 elemental damage
	Roll 1d6:
1.	Acid
2.	Electric
3.	Fire
4.	Frost
5.	Holy
6.	Unholy
3	Cursed
4	Paralysis (save or become paralyzed for 1d6 rounds)
5	Poison
6	Sharp (critical hits on 19-20)
